LIFE OF JAPANESE WOMEN.

"New Woman" Appearing in the Land of the Rising Sun.

Arthur Diosy, in the Young Woman. Until recent years Japanese women were given little chance of taking part in the general life of the nation. But since the great awakening in 1868, when Japan began to adopt all that she found most worthy in Western civilization to her own use, the position of her women has undergone a great change. The facilities for education and the quality of the instruct tion they now receive can bear comparison with anything provided for women in the most advanced countries in the West. Japanese girls, even of the poorest classes. receive an education which, entirely free and undenominational, is quite equal to that imparted to the children in those nations which are foremost in the matter of education, such as Germany, America, Holland, Sweden, or Switzerland, and far superior in its system to that obtainable by the majority of British girls of the same class. A good university for women has recently been established in Tokio, and is largely attended.

According to Mr. Diosy, it seemed likely at once that the new woman would obtain a foothold in Japan. When the sudden change from the old feudalism to modern methods caused so many of the ancient | New York Tribune. landmarks to disappear the new woman made her appearance for a season in the "Land of the Rising Sun," and at one time there was even a female lawyer in Tokio. But now that the conditions of life are settling down, such abnormal developments have almost entirely died out. There are, nevertheless, many female clerks, and the telephone exchanges are also served by girls, but with this distinction-certainly in favor of the far Eastern communitythat the Japanese telephone girl is ever alert, has, like nearly all her sisters, a delightful, silvery voice, speaks most clearly, and never allows her utterances to be thickened by mouthfuls of bread and butter, a delicacy unknown to Japanese It would be a mistake to think that because the life of Japanese women is tirely devoted to duty no margin is left for recreation. There are no merrier or more pleasure-loving women in the wide world, but their amusements are of a simple and inexpensive character. The chief delight lies in simple games, such as are played in the family circle or with intimate friends, and in the observance of the numerous festivals, which occur at least once a month, all of them connected with the love of what is beautiful in nature-the flowering of certain plants, the beauty of sunsets, or of newly fallen snow-and these are enjoyed by rich and poor alike. They show great facility in poetical composition, and at a family party they love to sit in a circle, each one in turn extemporizing a little poem on some event of the day, and such subjects as births and marriages, home comings, and journeys are a fruitful source of inspiration.

PROFITED BY THE ADVICE.

Experience of a Woman Who Edited

a Question Column.

Philadelphia Inquirer. "Once upon a time," said the newspaper woman of experience, "I edited a column of 'Whats and Whys.' Every one was privileged to ask me any old thing, and it was up to me to answer. Pardon my slang, but have been spending a week in a household of college girls, and I find that the higher education does not include the lower branches, such as plain and correct English. Well, I was going to tell you about my famous column-for it was famous all over the country, and the letters that came pouring in to me would have staggered our strenuous President. "One day I received an appealing letter from a young girl asking my advice as to whether she and her flance had best wait six months to marry, and at the end of that time be able to go into a little home of their own, or whether they should marry immediately and live in a boarding house until they could save up enough to furnish a home. I was much impressed with the letter, and I sat me down and penned quite an affecting epistle to the girl, with a few wise saws thrown in for the young man in the case. "I pictured to them the sacredness of a home of their own, and urged them to shun the boarding house as they would the plague, even if they had to wait a year before getting married. That letter 'took,' as you will see, but not in the way I expected it would.

"One day in the following spring, about six months after the letters of request and exhortation were written, into my sanctum sailed a young and radiant woman with a picture hat and a long, light coat. Prosperity and self-satisfaction shone from her elaborate 'get-up' and irradiated from her beaming face. She strode up to me and seized both of my hands. 'I do want to thank you so much,' she said. 'I am the girl you advised to wait six months rather than live in a boarding house-my fiance worked for his father, don't you remember? Well, I am married now, and so happy and so glad I took your advice-I owe all my present happiness to you! "Tears started to my eyes and I regretted that the night before I had been lamenting and give advice to persons who had no notion of using it. I stammered something about being so glad that she was happy and murmured something about the young man in the case. Then she threw back her head and laughed a silvery peal of laughter that made the spiders in the office rafters scuttle away in affright. 'Why, I didn't marry him,' she said, between trills. 'That's just where the good advice came in. I waited and married his father!"

Who Licks the Stamp? Detroit Tribune.

The housewives of Winsted, Conn., have forced local union bakers to leave the label off most of their pastry since a communication appeared in public print a few days ago asking "Who licked the dirty little label?"

Charles Albers, a local baker, replied the abels were put on the bottoms of the tins before the bread or cake dough was baked. but this explanation was upset by a person signing "Housekeeper," who wrote as fol-"I asked the driver of a cart, 'Who licked

the stamps?' He said they were printed on sticky fly paper and do not have to be icked. While we speculate, the stamp gets in its deadly work. The dyspeptic boarder at our house has detected, or thinks she has detected, the smell of beer under one of these stamps. I can smell the breath of onions escaping faintly when the corners of the stamps are pried up. Onions are healthy, but beer-shades of the growler, it is too much! The bakerman's mouth may be as clean as anybody's, his tongue as free from fur, his lips as pure as our own, and still we should prefer to take our stamps and our bread in separate doses. "The baker may stick his labels on public sign post or on the meeting house door for aught I care, but let him 'give us this day our daily bread,' and give it to us straight."

Woman and Men's Religion.

Roswell Field, in Chicago Post. The friends and admirers of that stupendous institution of learning, the University of Chicago, are greatly disturbed by the grave assurance from President Harper that religious infidelity is fast increasing among the students. The doctor is of the opinion that this is owing to the "wretched conditions which exist before boys and girls reach the college years, but we fear this is a mere subterfuge to avert the blame from the policy of segregation. It is significant that Bishop Merrill, of the Methodist Church, is calling attention to the fact that young ministers find it most difficult to secure wives under existing circumstances, and that the godly young man is not held as an eligible parti. The girl of the present age is proud and high-spirited and does not like to be shunted off as if she were a piece of useless furniture, and young men, deprived of the stimulus of spirituality so common among women, naturally fall into evil and abandoned ways, thereby bringing grief to good Dr. Harper. There may be reasons why young men and women should not enjoy coeducation, but not one man in a thousand is likely to hanker after the calm delights of Sunday school and divine service unless he is in one way or another tied up with a young woman. Where segregation flourishes infidelity holds sway. Eve has

Should Learn to Sew. "I can't so much as put a new braid on the bottom of my skirts," said a young woman—a young woman who earns $50 a week with her pen. "But you can afford to hire all such work done for you," added the elder woman with her, "and isn't that a good deal better than fussing around with it yourself?" "No, I don't think so," put in a girl friend. "I earn almost as much as Alice New here, but I do all my mending and millinery, and not a little of my dressmaking. I shouldn't dream of going out and buying myself a fancy stock, for instance. I see something I like, then I make one like it. 1560 My mother brought me up to be handy with my needle, and, saving your presence, Alice, I think I'm all the richer for it now. "A woman doesn't seem like a woman to me unless she can handle her needle. commented Alice's grandmother. "One doesn't have to do a thing all the time just because one knows how to do it. But read your Goethes, young women, and you'll find that the great German said it was useful to know everything. When Lent comes around again, Alice, I would recom-mend you to try rebraiding your gowns and darning your stockings as a penance.

How to Select Flower Seed.

Country Life in America. For myself I like to make the bold effects with a few of the old, profuse and reliable kinds. I like whole masses and clouds of them. Then the other kinds I like to grow in smaller areas at one side in a half experimental way. There is no need of trying to grow equal quantities of all the kinds that you select. There is no emphasis and no modulation in such a scheme. There should be major and minor

The minor keys may be of almost any kind of plant. Since these plants are semiexperimental it does not matter if some of them fail outright. Why not begin the list at A and buy as many as you can afford and can accommodate this year then continue the list next year? In five or ten years you will have grown the alphabet and will have learned as much horticulture and botany as most persons learn in a college course. And some of these plants will become your permanent friends.

No Sentiment Left.

I was chatting with an old retired army officer, whose thirty-seven years of service had been spent mostly on the Western frontier. The soft spring air sent me off into a dream of outdoor delights, and I said: "I've a notion to put up a tent in my back yard and sleep in it this summer.' "I've a notion to put up one in my back yard, too," said the grizzled veteran, "so that I can walk out every evening and look at it and thank God that I haven't got to
